Belisted John the Woman."

What is said to be the first successful attempt to synchronize a long picture production with a musical score has been accomplished by William Furst, composer of the Jric accompaniment to "Joan the Woman." This picture, which is in cleven reels mad takes about two-and-half bours for exhibition, will be shown at the Belasco Theater all next week with a matinee Sunday at 3 °c clock. Miss Geraldine Farrar, noted American prima donna, is the star, appearing in the role of Joan of Arc.

This is not the first time Mr. Furst has prepared a music score for a big Joan of Arc production, as it was he who composed the music for the Joan of Arc production, as it was he who composed the music for the Joan of Arc perform and the presented Maude Adams as the immortal Maid of Orleans. Some years before that time and subsequently Mr. Furst was music director for the enterprises of the late Charles Frohman and for David Belasco. His setting for "Kismet" and other productions attracted wide attention.

When Miss Farrar was at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., last summer appearing as Joan of Arc before the camera, Mr. Furst at the same time was working on the music score for the production. This association between the composer, the star and the producer, Cecil B. De Mille, established a new kind of relationship so far as the music score for the production is that when Mr. De Mille came to New York and firsh showed "Joan the Woman" privately to friends, he remarked when they congratulated him: "It am glad you are delighted, but wait until you see it at the same time you hear Mr. Furst's score." It was a word of prophecy more than realised at the public exhibition.
